God’s Law in Prophecy

If God’s law was truly abolished after the cross, why does Scripture repeatedly depict its relevance in future events? Could it be that God’s law has not been abolished, but is still relevant for believers today? Consider the following Biblical prophecies:

- Future Nations Keeping the Feast of Tabernacles: Zechariah 14:16-21 describes a time in the Millennial Kingdom when the survivors of the nations will come to Jerusalem each year to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles. Those who refuse to participate will face consequences like drought. Why would this appointed time remain significant if God’s law is irrelevant?
- Reinstatement of the Levitical Priesthood in the Millennium: Ezekiel 40-48 speaks of the future Millennial Temple, where the Levitical priesthood and sacrifices will be reinstated. Why would these practices return if God’s instructions for them no longer matter?
- Clean and Unclean Animals in End-Time Prophecy: Revelation 18:2 makes a distinction between clean and unclean animals, echoing the dietary laws of Leviticus 11. Why would this distinction continue in the future if the law—making it’s distinction—had been abolished?
- Judgment for Eating Unclean Animals in the Last Days: Isaiah 66:17 prophesies that those eating unclean animals like pigs and mice will face judgment in the end times. If dietary laws no longer apply, why would this behavior provoke condemnation?

- The Sabbath Observance in Future Events: Isaiah 66:23, Ezekiel 46:1-4, and Isaiah 2:2-3 all describe the continued observance of the Sabbath after Yeshua's return. From worship in the future Millennial Temple to the nations streaming to Jerusalem to learn God's ways, these verses emphasize that the Sabbath will remain a vital part of God's plan for humanity. If the Biblical Sabbath was abolished, why do these future prophecies show it being kept, after the Messiah's second coming?
- Torah Observance as a Mark of the Faithful: Revelation 14:12 identifies the saints as those who keep God's commandments and have faith in Yeshua. Why is Torah observance highlighted as a defining characteristic of God's people in the end times?

These future prophecies emphasize that God's law is not obsolete but an enduring expression of His will for humanity. If these commands will be observed in the Millennial Kingdom and beyond, shouldn't we begin living in obedience to them today?
